NCC to carry out road, pavement and cycle path restoration for City of Copenhagen

NCC has won a four-year framework agreement and expects this to cover projects worth around DKK 160 million during this period.

A large number of municipal road sections in Copenhagen are to be restored due to wear. Sections of road are generally restored from façade to façade, so that carriageways, cycle paths and pavements are all restored.

The framework agreement between NCC and the City of Copenhagen covers both large and small roads with very different traffic intensity and environments, and in this case NCC will benefit greatly from its long-standing experience of performing work on Copenhagen's streets. NCC has had a similar framework agreement since 2018, under which projects such as restoration work in Nørrebro have been carried out, and a major project is currently underway in Østerbro.

Significant improvement for Copenhagen roads

"We are proud to have won the contract, which includes projects that will utilize some of our absolute core expertise, and we're looking forward to the task of improving many kilometres of roads, cycle paths and pavement over the next four years for Copenhageners to enjoy using," says Michael Thomsen, director of NCC's Infra Services unit. "We have a lot of experience working on Copenhagen's streets, where we regularly work with both water and district heating systems, and we hope that Copenhageners can appreciate we're unable to improve their roads and cycle paths without – quite literally – getting under their feet. On the other hand, they will experience a significant improvement in the roads they use."

Work on the first set of roads is underway, and planning is now in progress to determine which projects are to be penciled in for the coming year.

The orders will be registered on an ongoing basis in the Infrastructure business area.
